I hope by the time you read this, signs of spring will be appearing where you are. As I get older, I find myself looking forward to warmer weather more intensely than in the past. I recently read some accounts of how our ancestors spend the winter months in the field and the hardships they endured. They were definitely better men than we are. But spring also brings the start of many events all across the Confederation. Memorial Day services, reenactments, etc., are just a few events which we all can look forward to and participate in.

The cultural Marxists continue their attacks on, not only Southern history but, all of our American history with the plans to destroy the Confederate Memorial at Arlington National Cemetery. They have not said, but I'm sure they also plan to dig up the graves and throw them in a landfill somewhere. In this issue we have an excellent article on Moses Jacob Ezekiel, who made the memorial and is buried at its base by Richard Hines and Paul Gottfried. Ezekiel was a student at VMI and participated in the Battle of New Market as a cadet. After the War he became one of the most famous Jewish artists in the world and his work is on display all over the world. I won't tell you more as you can read the article.

Next up is the story of Daniel Pratt, one of the foremost industrialists in the South, and one of the foremost supporters of the Confederate States of America. I had not heard his story before and I feel certain you will enjoy it.

We all know South Carolina was the first state to leave the Union and The South Carolina Signers Monument on Secession Hill tells the story of how this happened and the new monument which commemorates this history. Even in this cancel culture we live in today, new monuments are going up.

Our 128th Annual National Reunion in Hot Springs, AR, is fast approaching and registration information, events, and a schedule are included in this issue. It is never too early to sign up and reserve your space for our reunion. Hot Springs is a great place and I'm already looking forward to attending. I hope to see many of you there!

Until then, I remain,

Yours in the Cause.

Different Processes and Saving Arlington

In a previous article, I wrote about “The Shopping Cart Test.” It is said a person’s character can be determined through the simple choice of returning the shopping cart they were using. No reward for putting it in the cart return. No punishment for leaving it sitting in a parking space. While doing “Holiday Shopping,” I had to stop multiple times and move carts just to be able to pull into a space. I can safely say the character of some shoppers can be brought into question. This is important because the principle of self-government was the foundation on which our country was built. The simple act of taking care of your own business. The “Shopping Cart Test” is a piece called put it back from where you got it. You break it, you fix it. You are responsible for your own actions. Don’t make people clean up your messes. I did watch and see some people not only put their cart back, they put back other carts. Some people get it. Let’s strive to be the ones who understand. Put up your buggy.

Three words, RECRUITMENT and RETENTION. I have spoken about those many times and I will continue to preach those words because they are the lifeblood of this organization. New members are the lifeblood for any organization from The Church to The Rotary Club. Those words are used together but they are very different processes. I personally think it is the difference between getting a girlfriend and keeping a girlfriend. First you have to recruit her. You have to get her attention and you do that by getting yourself out there and known. In our terms, that would be setting up a recruiting booth or other public forum. Then you have to convince her you are the right choice for her. In our terms, that would be showing the potential new member what the SCV has to offer and as a member of the local camp this is what we do. Make it inviting. Then you have to keep her. You do this by paying attention to the big things and the little things. After dating for a short while, you better know her birthday and what food she likes. If you start forgetting her birthday or don’t answer that call or text, the relationship isn’t going to last and guess what? She is going to talk bad to all her friends about you. That is the same with our organization. Pay attention to the members. If they want programs, give them programs. If they want to reenact, then help with reenactments. Our organization offers everything from a Stephen D. Lee symposium to memorial services. Encourage all these things and keep the relationship growing. I know we can’t be everything to everyone but don’t discourage camp activities because it is not something you want to do. This will require camps to change and evolve as new members come in. The only constant I know of is change. Remember, you have to be something somebody wants before somebody wants you and you have to be worth keeping for someone to want to stay around.

I appreciate the people who take the time to read the Confederate Veteran magazine. I know people do because I have received responses. The magazine is an important source of information. A great deal of time, effort and discussion goes into articles, ads and putting it together. As someone who struggles to write an article, I appreciate those who take a few moments to open the cover and do a little reading. It is an agonizing labor of love. If you want to know what is going on in The Confederation, look in The Confederate Veteran.

You received a Museum Donation Letter in the latest Confederate Veteran. You will be receiving a letter in future Confederate Veteran magazines as well. Eliminating the debt of the Confederate Museum is extremely important and a major priority. Debt keeps us from doing the things we need to do such as grow the museum by getting display cabinets and artifacts. Just like your house payment and car payment, what would you be able to do if you eliminated that debt? The Confederate Museum should become an integral part of the telling of the true and complete story. We need our members visiting the museum and supporting the museum. The timeline on the walls inside the museum is almost complete. I have watched as people stood and read panel after panel. They have taken pictures of panels. The story is there. We need to get this information out to the public by advertising the Confederate Museum and Elm Springs anywhere we can and get enough people coming through the front doors we turn them into revolving doors.

Also in the latest Confederate Veteran was a letter called Forrest Last Ride which is the fund which will be used to rebuild the Forrest Plaza as it was originally intended by Charles Henry Niehaus, who was the designer of the plaza and the sculptor of General Nathan Bedford Forrest astride King Phillip, and the family of General Forrest. Yes, General Forrest's family was involved in the design of the Forrest Plaza. The General Executive Council (GEC) has voted to rebuild the entire plaza as it was originally intended. The estimated cost will be $150,000. We had funds left over from the Forrest Reinterment so we currently have approximately $76,000 in that fund. Good people of the Southland we are already halfway. I'll answer the next question of when it will be built. That is going to depend on you. It will not be built until we have $150,000 raised. No debt will be incurred for the rebuilding of the Forrest Plaza. The quicker the money is raised the quicker it will be rebuilt. The decision is yours.

Most of the remainder of this article is a rewrite. I had the article mostly done and then my dad took a turn for the worse. He crossed the river to rest in the shade of the trees about 5:15 on Friday morning December 30th. I want to thank everyone for the calls, cards and flowers. The outpouring of heartfelt emotions from everyone is a true testament to the beauty of the people from The Southland. I am proud to be a Southerner.

SCV needs a tough legal team in place

To the Editor

The SCV needs a permanent, full-time, top flight legal division to handle our monument and other issues. We are in a struggle with Satanic forces who want to destroy us as a people, and we are steadily losing ground. Our lawyers need to be outstanding, tough, innovative, and dedicated to our cause, and to be deployed wherever needed most. Most of our legal work has been routine and we have not exhausted all the possibilities of countering the threats by legal proceedings. People will be willing to contribute for this.

Also, every camp needs a standing, active committee of three to deal with local officials. To politely, but with deadly seriousness, point out that treason will bring damage to them.

We have a duty to protect our Southern heritage

To the Editor:

I must strongly disagree with Mr. David Lohnes' letter in the November/December 2022 issue. As a totally disabled veteran with more than 34 service years to the USA, including decades as a federal employee, I feel my views may reflect that of most other veterans.

In my humble opinion, the government of the United States has eroded far from the Constitutional Republic that our Founding Fathers gave us to defend. This nation is now a governmental corporation that in no way resembles "the Constitution of these united states" (small letters intended and as originally written). Therefore, it is not the nation to whom Robert E. Lee swore allegiance. It is a mere shell of the once proud nation to whom all veterans and federal employees have sworn our allegiance. Further, today's "Constitution of the United States" is far inferior to the Constitution of the Confederate States of America!

I, too, come from a long line of military veterans. As I served in Berlin, I often stood on the Wall and walked through the streets of East Berlin, observing the empty, lost, blank stares of beaten slaves of the Soviet Union. I now see the same faces in the streets of this nation. The leaders of this nation have destroyed its founding documents and are now slowly chipping away at what was once "the greatest nation on earth." Yet even now, it is still the best option in the world as evidenced by the invasion of the southern border. No sane person leaves this nation for a better one!

James Ron Kennedy's words confirm, and I support, the "us vs. them" mentality. Should we shrink from our duty to protect and defend the Heritage of the South and those valiant Ancestors, we would not deserve to be Compatriots of the Sons of Confederate Veterans. If the "SCV is a disloyal, secessionist organization," then I am more proud and determined to support that Cause! As it says in Revelation 3:16: "So then, because you are lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will vomit you out of My mouth."

War was about upholding Constitution

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to Mr. David Lohnes' letter published in the November/December 2022 issue of Confederate Veteran. Mr. Lohnes takes issue with Mr. James Ron Kennedy's "militaristic" language. He then goes on to present, what seems to me, a dichotomy of conflicting thoughts in juxtaposition to one another. He also, I must say, does not present the full title of Mr. Kennedy's editorial, which is misleading and possibly suggests obfuscation.

Let me just say that I had no issue with Mr. Kennedy's editorial and I am a retired Army officer who has been to war. My father and his brother fought in Vietnam, another uncle in Korea, my grandfather in WWII, a great-uncle in WWI, and I have an ancestor with active militia service against the British. I would also say, just to keep a sense of perspective, that we do not live in the same country my grandfather fought for, or even my father, and I daresay perhaps not even myself.

The flags of the Confederacy are my flags because my kith and kin lived under them and fought for them. Mr. Lohnes speaks of "protecting and upholding the constitution of the United States and bearing true faith and allegiance to the same." This is exactly what the War Between the States was about. The constitution of 1787, a product of our Revolutionary War forebears, was archived in the dust bin of history in 1861, and there it has remained.

I commend Mr. Lohnes for being in the SCV and expressing his opinion. All of us who love the old South and honor our Confederate blood are bonded. We may squabble among ourselves sometimes but must stand together when it matters. I detest any man who would turn his back upon his blood and bone who only did what honor and duty demanded.

Tax-free donations to our Confederate Museum

To the Editor:

Now that 2023 is here and tax season is upon us, this is a good time to give serious consideration of upping your donations to our Confederate Museum in Columbia, Tennessee. If you have not already donated to our museum now is the time to do so. Don't forget, your donations are tax deductible for the Sons of Confederate Veteran's Confederate Museum is a 501(c)3 not for profit institution.

One very good way to make a donation is by donating your 2023 IRA RMD "required minimum distribution." When you direct you RMD "directly" to the Confederate Museum, you do not pay income taxes on that otherwise taxable distribution. Take advantage of this tax rule and donate you RMD in 2023.

Lots of Confederate heritage in Midwest

To the Editor:

I am forty-two years old and have spent 39 of my years in Idaho, Montana, Washington, and Oregon. I married into a 4th generation Idaho, Montana family. I have spent my life surrounded by the cattle, lumber, and mining culture which constitutes the economic backbone of these States. I am familiar with this culture as I have participated in it as a cowboy on horseback in the sagebrush and as a timber cruiser on foot working in isolation through rugged mountain terrain. I am also a blacksmith and farrier by trade. A considerable amount of my time has been spent putting miles on an old truck traveling back roads and working on horses for mountain people who very much resemble the pioneers of the past. I have worked for others who own multiple banks and large cattle ranches denominated not in acres but in sections or townships.

The previous five generations on both sides of my family have origins in the South and Midwest. My paternal grandfather, a Virginian still living in Maryland, instilled in me an interest for American history through his, and later my, involvement in NSSA competition shoots, War between the States reenactments, and visits to large battlefields in the area. He also introduced me to the SCV 17 years ago. I am greatly indebted to my grandfather and the SCV for a large portion of my WBTS historical perspective. Below are my observations of the Northwest's agrarian history and culture due to my personal association with many of its colorful third-sixth generation characters.

The early history of settlement in Idaho and Montana (a part of the Oregon territory), began in the 1860's. A large amount of immigration into this part of Oregon territory came from the south. Small mining towns not far from here with the names of Dixie or Leesburg, and are on our maps. The extinct mining town of Florence, elevation 6,000 feet, was a hotbed of violence and used its main street as a Mason-Dixon line to divide the Northern and Southern placer miners habitations. On July 4, 1863 blood shed was narrowly avoided as an ice sculpture of George Washington, which took many days to carve, was unveiled for the people to view. Committees representing members of both the northern and southern miners had planned ahead to successfully avoid bloodshed on this day by honoring a historical figure both sides respected, as ironically the battle of Gettysburg was in progress back east. Drainages with the names of "Seccesh" or "Confederate" creek testify to the origin of the people who lived here. It is likely many third-sixth generation Idahoans who are interested in their family history have Confederate ancestors. During my lifetime through today it has not been unusual to see the ANV Confederate Battle Flag flying at individual residences or on pickup trucks on a trip through the back roads of these states.

Philosophically, 3rd generation natives of the rural Northwest hold a similar distrust of the central government which has locked away a high percentage of the states lands and resources into national forests. Sixty percent of Idaho is not allowed to be inhabited and thousands of acres of this "Land of No Use" burn every year because a lack of federal resources has led to a neglect in healthy forestry management practices.

Another large percentage of uninhabited land is owned by large timber companies who are descendants of the great Northern "Robber Barons." They have benefited indirectly from the large land grants given to the railroads by the central government which initially withdrew large amounts of public land away from the people to benefit monopolistic corporate interests. Today small amounts of this land are sometimes purchased by the state or sold to private purchasers and have slowly been inhabited. Mining rights are real property which can be bought or sold. Many homes and cabins have been burnt to the ground over the years as the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management have done their best to restrict the use or settlement of Idaho's land and resources by individuals.

Small cattleman such as Idahoan Tim Lowery have won victories in the courts (see Joyce Livestock vs. US) to preserve their real property grazing and water rights, which at times predate the creation of the Forest Service and BLM. Unfortunately this legal victory comes at a cost in legal expenses which puts landowners in danger of losing all they have managed to retain by their victory. Is it any wonder why Idahoans such as

Changing Times and Correct History

Recently a friend gave me a copy of a 1990 issue of Civil War Times. While perusing the magazine, I was reminded just how much has changed in the past 33 years. Throughout the magazine one can find numerous Confederate flags, ads for pro-South books, paintings, and a full-page ad for a collector's issue "Historic Civil War Jefferson Davis Stamp" in mint condition. Within the pages of this magazine there is a full-page ad for subscription to the SCV's Confederate Veteran magazine as well as an ad for membership in the SCV. One featured article is titled, 'Six Guns Against The Fleet,' the story of the heroic defense of Sabine Pass by forty-six Irish Texas Confederates, commanded by Lt. Dick Dowling. Descending upon the Confederates at Sabine Pass were four Federal gunboats and transport vessels totaling 22 vessels, carrying 5,000 Yankee invaders. The article relates the story of how the Confederate commander, Lt. Dowling, took a Confederate flag and while waving it over his head proclaimed, "Dick Dowling is a dead man before this flag shall come down." The conduct of not only the heroic defenders of the Confederate fort but also the patriotic devotion demonstrated by the civilian population in the area, is not just heart-warming, it is a challenge to us today. This lop-sided Confederate victory became the incentive for one of the few medals issued by the Confederate Government. By the end of the war, Lt. Dowling had risen to the rank of major.

Today, as opposed to 1990, it is difficult to find any national media outlet which will freely display a Confederate flag, allow ads for pro-South books, or honor any Confederate leader. But the SCV is busy developing various national outreach programs which can reach a larger audience. More significantly, there is a lesson to be learned from the story of the Battle of Sabine Pass. The lesson is more important today than it was just after Lt. Dowling's victory. The lesson for us is that, even in the face of great opposition, courage, audacity, and bold action can win even against tremendous odds. As Lt. Dowling's Texans proved, a small and determined group can defeat a larger, well-supplied enemy. Notice Lt. Dowling's message to his fellow Confederates that he would die "before this flag shall come down." Every modern Confederate must have the same conviction and display the same courage Lt. Dowling and the other defenders of Sabine Pass showed. If we do so, we too shall be victorious.

Early this year (2023), I heard Newt Gingrich, former US Speaker of the House of Representatives, declare how correct Lincoln was in preventing secession. Gingrich noted if secession was allowed, it would end up in the total destruction of society because even cities and townships would exercise that power. Using his "bully pulpit," Gingrich has taken a shot at every Confederate Veteran. These are the men the SCV is dedicated to defend. I do not know if Lincoln ever made the argument that if a state is allowed to secede from the union, a county could therefore secede from a state, and a city could secede from a county — all of which would lead to social anarchy. Gingrich, a Republican, said Lincoln believed this to be the case and used it as evidence why no one should support the concept of secession as embraced by our Confederate forefathers. Here are the facts Mr. Gingrich and Lincoln ignored about the right of secession.

In the American context, secession is an act of a sovereign political body. From the time each colony expelled all Royal authority within the borders of their colony, that colony was then endowed with the Rights of a sovereign body, that is, a sovereign state. When the First Continental Congress was called, delegates from sovereign states took their seat. They were authorized by their state to vote only as their state permitted them to do so. Every state, regardless of size or population had one vote. Small states in landmass such as Rhode Island, Delaware, South Carolina, had the same vote as larger states such as New York or Virginia. States with large populations such as Pennsylvania and Massachusetts had the same votes as States with small populations such as Georgia and New Hampshire. This is in recognition of the fact that in councils of nations (states), all states have only one vote, regardless of size. The same is true throughout the early history of these United States where all states were recognized as sovereign states. Only a sovereign political body has the right to accede or secede from an association, i.e., a compact or union. This is fully acknowledged by James Madison in Federalist Paper Number 43 when he announces “the safety and happiness of a society are the objects at which all political institutions must be sacrificed.” Notice big government is not the one to determine when an institution, such as a union, must be sacrificed but rather the “safety and happiness” of the society is the determining factor. According to Mr. Gingrich and Mr. Lincoln, it is the Federal Government which has the sole right to determine if “we the people” are happy and secure. While debating the ratification of the Constitution, Patrick Henry identified the prime object of American government when he stated, “The first thing I have at heart is American liberty, the second is American union.”

As noted, only sovereign bodies can accede or secede from any compact, treaty, or union. As American history demonstrates, the States of these United States are sovereign States therefore they have the “unalienable” right to secede. A county, city, or other political entity drawing its existence from an act of a sovereign state, is not sovereign and therefore cannot secede — Mr. Gingrich and Mr. Lincoln’s argument is therefore an erroneous and ridiculous argument.

The exposing of Mr. Gingrich and Mr. Lincoln’s ludicrous and absurd insult to Confederate Veterans and those of us who hold to the truth of their cause, is necessary to “vindicate the Cause for which they fought.” This “vindication” does little good if it is only seen in the pages of the Confederate Veteran magazine. If the SCV only repeats what is almost common knowledge to its members, we will eventually

AN EDITORIAL FROM THE CHIEF OF
HERITAGE OPERATIONS
JAMES RON KENNEDY

Reclaiming The North/South Reconciliation

In 1994, the Kennedy Twins upset quite a few pacified Southerners in the SCV when we warned there was an active campaign of “Yankee Cultural Genocide” waged against all things Southern. If, in 1994, “those people” (General Lee’s polite term for Yankees) conducting their slanderous anti-South campaign began removing monuments in Richmond, removing the “Reconciliation” monument in Arlington National Park, and renaming military bases named for Southern heroes, there would have been an immediate social and political uprising. But “those people” did their nefarious work gradually, while loyal Southerners held on to the illusion our local, state, and Federal Government, “will never do that!” The fact the United States Federal Government endorsed and is actively engaged in the “Woke” campaign of anti-South cultural genocide is proof the era of Reconciliation is over — at least for now.

The Era of Reconciliation — the Good Ole Days

During the Era of Reconciliation, the South was allowed the appearance of self-government, Southerners were allowed to raise monuments to their Confederate kinsmen, and the nation joined in the celebration of Confederate history by issuing coins and stamps honoring Confederate heroes and by naming military tanks, ships, and military bases in honor of Confederate heroes. In exchange, the South accepted the new all-powerful Federal Government created by the Republican Party during Reconstruction. The South tactically agreed never again to attempt to secede from the all-powerful Federal Government. Southerners demonstrated their loyalty to America’s new form of government through an outpouring of Southern blood in every war since the end of active Reconstruction (circa 1877). Southerners fought under the Stars and Stripes, but in every war since 1877, you can find photographs of Southerners proudly flying the Confederate flag. Our Woke masters no longer permit such things — the Good Ole Days are over.

They thought they were free

Milton Mayer, in his book They Thought They Were Free, explains how Jews in Germany allowed themselves to be herded into concentration camps. During World War I, many Jews served honorably in the Imperial German Army and Navy. They felt themselves to be a part of Germany and never believed their German government would turn against them. It did not happen overnight; it happened gradually. Mayer explains, "You wait for one great shocking occasion thinking that others, when such a shock come, will join with you in resisting. ... But the one great shocking occasion, when tens or hundreds of thousands will join with you, never comes. ... If the last and worst act had come immediately after the first and smallest, thousands would have been sufficiently shocked ... but of course this isn't the way it happens. In between comes all the hundreds of little steps each of them preparing you not to be shocked by the next." The same can be said of Southerners. The era of Reconciliation convinced us that Southerners were an equal partner in this "One nation indivisible," but "those people" never accepted the South's moral and political conservative traditions. They merely tolerated it for a season — waiting for a more opportune time. That time is now!

Gradualism — tyranny one small step at a time

"Those people" actively attacked traditional values long before they began their active attack against our Southern heritage. They are infiltrating our educational system and actively indoctrinating American students on the virtues of extreme leftist ideology and the evil nature of America's founding. In 1944, Christian philosopher C. S. Lewis warned the enemies of Western Christian civilization were waging war against "all traditional values." And they are doing it not by a bold frontal attack but by way of gradualism. For example, in 1962, the Federal Supreme Court issued a decision which began the Federal Government's war against God and the Bible. Justice Potter Stewart wrote a dissenting opinion in which he noted the Federal Court established secularism as America's official religion. In 1962, most folks in the US were "church-going" citizens. We could have easily halted the Federal Government's attack on traditional Judeo-Christian values, but we did nothing. If, in 1962, the Federal Supreme Court ruled in favor of transgenderism or required states to recognize homosexual marriage, a revolt would have occurred. But by way of gradualism, apathetic Christians facilitated America's "slouch toward Gomorrah."

Parallel structures as a means of organized resistance

This is the first time non-Southern conservative

Americans live under an oppressive government. But it is not the first time for Southerners. Political oppression is, unfortunately, a common condition for humanity. There are numerous examples of how folks used non-violent methods to defeat their oppressors. Václav Havel, Czech statesman, author, poet, and former dissident who served as the last president of Czechoslovakia (1989-92), encouraged his fellow dissidents fighting against Communist tyranny, "One of the most important tasks of the 'dissident movement' ... is to support and develop parallel social structures ... to extricate itself radically from its involvement in the totalitarian system ... it would be quite wrong to understand the parallel structures and the parallel society as a retreat into a ghetto and an act of isolation. ... The ultimate phase of this process is the situation in which the official structures ... replaced by new structures that have evolved from below. ..." (From Havel's The Power of the Powerless and Living in Truth).

The point Havel makes is when a people find themselves in a situation where "their" government actively oppresses them and the people are "Powerless" regarding their ability to control or influence the government, then the people must develop parallel social and quasi-political structures. These social and quasi-political "structures" must be outside the traditional political system. They must be designed to influence the government, or, if necessary, they must be ready to assume control when the oppressive government collapses of its own weight. This is a form of irregular political warfare. Many people worldwide used these non-violent techniques to preserve their culture or gain independence. Five examples are noted in Dixie Rising-Rules for Rebels.

Reclaiming Reconciliation

How do we create a new era of Reconciliation? First, we must realize we cannot go back to the past. We must construct a new era of Reconciliation. One all Americans will acknowledge. The second thing to realize is we are not alone. Preserving traditional South-

What is your testimony?

We the Sons of Confederate Veterans study, read, and share the testimony of our Confederate ancestors. But, do we share our testimony? A testimony of a person is telling of what influenced and directed their life. The Bible is a testimony of how God worked through people and orchestrated his influence and will. God declared the end before the beginning many times and still does today. We all have a testimony, but is it helpful to other? How can we have a worthy testimony? How can we help our young people of the South have a worthy testimony?

We must seek guidance from the Good Lord as Psalm 86: 11, "Teach me your way, O Lord: I will walk in your Truth. Untie my heart to fear Your name." The first place to start is at home with your wife and children, "Start children off on the way they should go, and even when they are old they will not turn from it" (Proverbs 22:6 NIV).

The process begins at birth. There is a day coming when they leave home and go out into the world on their own. Our job? Prepare them for that moment. Make sure they have the tools they need to live a life worthy of the high calling of the One they serve. This includes all the spiritual training.

Who carried Jesus and his brothers and sisters to the synagogue? Who taught them the ways of God? Who taught them proper behavior? Who trained Jesus to be a carpenter?

Today, it also includes teaching them about balancing a checkbook and being able to look someone in the eye and shake their hand. It includes telling the truth, working responsibly, Proverbs 18:9, "He also is slack in his work is a brother to him who destroys."

It includes discipling a child, do not hold back discipline from a child. It includes showing respect to seniors and other people. It includes showing them what being a husband looks like. It includes showing them what a real man looks like. It includes showing them to have compassion for others. It includes denying oneself.

When Robert E. Lee was older, a lady asked General Lee how to raise her son and his response was, "teach him to deny himself."

It includes learning about failure and disappointments and how to get up when you get knocked down.

It includes standing for what is right. It includes living as an example of what you teach. As Rev. Robin Scott said, "When Matt was a little boy we went somewhere to shop. When we got to the car after shopping, I realized the clerk had given me too much change. We went back in and returned the money. The young lady was so appreciative, sharing that she could have gotten in trouble if she came up short at the end of the day. Matt never commented until years later in a sermon he preached. He said it was that day he knew I practiced what I taught them.

If we want these little ones to become what they need to become when they become the parents, we have to accept every day is part of the classroom of life." Our first responsibility to show and live a Godly testimony is our home and in public.

When Robert E. Lee was a young boy, people asked Ms. Lee how she raised such a find son. She stated, "I pray and whip, pray and whip."

Today many fall in the category described in Romans

1:28-32 And just as they did not see fit to acknowledge God any longer, God gave them over to a depraved mind, to do those things which are not proper, being filled with all unrighteousness, wickedness, greed, evil; full of envy, murder, strife, deceit, malice; they are gossips, slanderers, haters of God, insolent, arrogant, boastful, inventors of evil, disobedient to parents, without understanding, untrustworthy, unloving, unmerciful, and although they know the ordinance of God, that those who practice such things are worthy of death, they not only do the same, but also give hearty approval to those who practice them.

But remember, Psalm 127:3-5 "Behold, children are a gift of the Lord, the fruit of the womb is a reward. Like arrows in the hand of a warrior, so are the children of one's youth. How blessed is the man whose quiver is full of them. ..." How about the young men in your camp, church, little league team, and so on, we should give them a testimony which is fitting of a Confederate, but more importantly a Christian.

As I grow older Proverbs 17:6 is so meaningful, not just for my blood grands but the ones I influenced; "Grandchildren are the crown of old men, And the glory of sons is their fathers."

The Good Lord has given us a great inheritance. Our forefathers lived up to their duty and obligations even after the war and hardships of being a Southerner; should we do less?

Palmetto Guard Militia Company (Co. I, 2nd SC Vol. Inf. Regt.)

This South Carolina militia company was formed in June 1851 in Charleston. It was part of the 17th Regiment, 4th Brigade and known as the Charleston Regiment. Most of the men of the 17th ranged in age from 45 to 60, which included several companies. As war loomed, the Palmetto Guards were accepted into state service on December 27, 1860.

On April 12, 1861, they were stationed at the Stephen's iron-clad battery and at Point Battery on Morris Island. The Iron Battery was made of heavy timbers overlaid with railroad tracks which were angled to 45 degrees. It was the world's first iron-clad armored artillery fortification manned with three Columbiad cannons. In addition, they manned a British rifled Blakely cannon along with three ten-inch mortars and two 42 pounders at Point Battery, Cummings Point.

Palmetto Guards, who were already uniformed and armed, could well be the first unit to be mustered in service for the war.

When stationed at Morris Island their duties included guard duty on the beach and watch duty in the lighthouse tower. Edmund Ruffin, the famous Virginian secessionist, was in Charleston when he was offered to serve with the Guards at the Iron Battery. He enlisted as a private but only for as long as the battle for Fort Sumter lasted. The captain of the detachment wanted him to fire the first shot at Fort Sumter, which he did and hit the south-west angle of the fort's parapet. He went on to fire all the cannon and mortars on Morris Island. After the surrender of Fort Sumter elements of the Palmetto Guard were the first Confederate troops of occupation to enter the fort.

The following month part of the Palmetto Guards were mustered into Confederate service at Camp Davis, VA, on May 22, when they became Co. I of the 2nd SC Volunteer Infantry Regiment. They numbered 102 men. The other part of the company became part of the Buist Light Artillery, Co. A, 18th Battalion, SC Artillery.

During the Battle of 1st Manassas, Co. I provided infantry support to the artillery. At the Battle of Malvern Hill the Guards lost their company commander. As part of Kershaw's Brigade the 2nd would play a distinguished part in all the operations from Manassas to Petersburg and at Bentonville, NC. The 2nd SC took heavy casualties during Gettysburg and the regiment never fully recovered from the battle. At Petersburg in 1864 the Guards lost two of its commanders in a three-week period.

In January 1865 the brigade was ordered to South Carolina to help stop Sherman's advance. The 2nd fought at Bentonville in North Carolina but only three men of the original Guards remained in the company.

On April 28, 1865, the regiment was surrendered, but during its lifetime the Palmetto Guards had fought in more than 32 engagements as Company I of the 2nd.

Moses Jacob Ezekiel

Remembering a Great Jewish-American Artist

By Richard Hines and Paul Gottfried

In 1914, when President Woodrow Wilson presided over the dedication ceremony of Moses Jacob Ezekiel's sweeping memorial, marking the graves of more than 400 Americans from the South who fought for the independence of their states, he characterized it as "an emblem of a reunited people." The Washington Post, on May 24th of the same year, reported, "It means, primarily, peace."

The process of reuniting America had leapt forward in 1898 at the conclusion of the Spanish-American War. Speaking at a ceremony in Philadelphia, President William McKinley announced, henceforth, Southern war dead would be honored in all cemeteries on Federal property, and, in particular, at Arlington National Cemetery. Two years later, in 1900, Congress passed legislation to create a Confederate section to be known as Jackson Circle.

The design for Jackson Circle was drawn up by the US Army Corps of Engineers. The center of the design was marked with an "M" to signify a place for a memorial. Moses Jacob Ezekiel, one of the great American sculptors of his day and the first Jewish-American artist to achieve international fame, was commissioned to create a sculpture to grace Jackson Circle and mark the graves of the American dead there. It became the most famous of all his works, and Ezekiel himself saw it as the pinnacle of his career. He asked to be buried beneath the memorial to his fellow comrades in arms. This work is now threatened with demolition as a result of recommendations by the Congressionally-mandated Naming Commission.

Problematically known as The Commission on the Naming of Items of the Department of Defense that Commemorate the Confederate States of America or Any Person Who Served Voluntarily with the Confederate States of America, The Naming Commission was created by a provision in the Defense Authorization Act of 2021 (Sec. 370). This bill was vetoed by President Trump but was overridden in the Senate on January 1st, 2021, by a vote of 81-13, with six senators declining to vote. Only five Republican senators from the Southern states voted to sustain President Trump's veto.

The Commission's reports amount, not just to a violation of traditions and law governing the US military for more than a century, but also to an abolition of history itself. Take, for example, the recommendation of the Commission to change the name of the naval ship, the USS Chancellorsville. Chancellorsville is a significant battle in American history, during which great heroism was displayed on both sides. In it, Union casualties exceeded Confederate casualties. Known as one of Lee's greatest victories, the battle nevertheless resulted in the death of Gen. Thomas Jonathon "Stonewall" Jackson from friendly fire. Any serious historian would agree that the absence of Jackson at Gettysburg was crucial to the Union victory at that decisive battle. However, the Naming Commission wants to efface this commemoration and our collective memory of that momentous event. Yet, few members of Congress, Republican or Democrat, stand against this abolition of history, culture, or tradition. Surely, the disinterment of the bodies of American soldiers from the South, who fought in America's War Between the States and who are in Federal cemeteries, cannot be far behind.

What a far cry from President McKinley's 1898

mandate to honor and decorate their graves! According to a Federal law passed in 1958, the US Department of Veterans Affairs to this day is legally mandated to furnish headstones for Confederate veterans as American veterans. The demolition of Moses Ezekiel's funerary masterpiece at Arlington Cemetery is an exercise of raw political power. It is the exercise of the radical 1960 slogan, "power from the barrel of a gun."

The commission's vice chairman and animating force, Brigadier General Ty Seidule, resembles a Soviet apparatchik from the old USSR. The problem with such ideologues in the military is that their fanaticism often obstructs sound military judgement and principles. A near majority of today's uniformed forces hail from the eleven states of the old Confederacy. Many are direct descendants of the veterans Seidule wants us to dishonor and whom he regards as "traitors."

Well-known for his Pavlovian animus against Robert E. Lee (Ezekiel's mentor and close friend) and anything Confederate, General Seidule has reported that the cost of the monument's removal, and the renaming of nine military bases, two naval ships, and all memorials in Arlington National Cemetery of Confederate origin, among others, will cost $62.5 million. Though Congress has not issued its formal approval, the monument has already been posted with demolition notices. Yet, the object of this politically-charged aggression is a Jewish artist of exceptional talent: the sculptor of the historic Arlington monument, Moses J. Ezekiel.

Moses Jacob Ezekiel, also known as Moses "Ritter von" Ezekiel (October 28, 1844-March 27, 1917) was born on October 28, 1844, to a family with Spanish-Jewish roots. Because his father suffered financial difficulties, he grew up primarily with his grandparents. Attending local schools in Richmond, he worked as a clerk and bookkeeper for his grandparents. However, he was always interested in painting and sketching and, at the age of thirteen, he produced his first sculpture — a clay bust of his father, Jacob.

With his mother's encouragement, he entered the Virginia Military Institute (VMI) in 1862; becoming the first cadet of Jewish descent. He had been a cadet for little more than a year when, early on May 10, 1864, the cadets were summoned by the beating of a long roll. He said, "I think we all knew, when we heard those drums, what was coming." He continued, "The corps of cadets was being sent down the valley of Virginia to help General John C. Breckinridge drive back the invaders. A loud hurrah showed the willingness with which those boys, between fifteen and eighteen years of age, would leave their alma mater and march toward the battlefield."

He would recall on May 15, 1864, the day of the Battle of New Market:

"It was raining, and we marched through a field of mud, in which I lost my shoes. Our battalion was beautifully in line when we came to an open field. Halfway across this field, the Minié balls began to whistle around our ears, and artillery shells came toward us. We advanced in so perfect order, as if drawn up for dress parade, charging the enemy's battery, which had been firing its hellfire upon us and engaging in close quarter fighting with pistols and bayonets, before eventually hoisting the VMI flag on top of a captured Union cannon in victory."

After the war, Ezekiel began attending anatomy classes at the Virginia Medical College (now the University of Virginia), but soon afterwards re-joined his father, who had started a new business in Cincinnati. There he studied and produced, in 1868, a small clay sculpture, "Industry," which portrayed a girl knitting socks while studying lessons from a book in her lap. This work gained some attention in the local press after it was displayed to the public; it would pave the way for Ezekiel's artistic career.

In 1869, Ezekiel would move to Berlin, where Rudolf Siemering offered him a position in his studio and where he studied life-modeling under the tutelage of Albert Wolff. It was in Germany he developed his classical style of sculpture, and in 1873, his bas relief "Israel" would earn first place in the Prix de Rome, accompanied by a year's study in that city.

Later that year, Ezekiel became a member of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, which commissioned him to sculpt "Religious Liberty." On one side stands a woman, flanked by an enormous eagle crushing a serpent; on the other, a young boy holds the Constitution and alongside it, brandishes an eternal flame. Ezekiel created this work in 1874, and it remains on permanent display at the Weitzman National Museum of American Jewish History, and its inscription reads: "Religious Liberty, Dedicated to the People of the United States by the Order of B'nai B'rith and the Israelites of America." Of this work, Ezekiel proclaimed, "I feel my inability to express myself fully on this expansive subject, and I must beg of you now to allow my work to speak for itself and for me."

Associating his personified Liberty with his own freedom of religion as a practicing Jew, Ezekiel would frequently exhibit his appreciation for his faith, his upbringing, his countrymen, and his training through his art. In 1877, he accepted a commission from American financier W.W. Corcoran, for the Corcoran Gallery of Art, to create eleven marbles of great artists through the ages, including Michelangelo and Leonardo Da Vinci.

In 1879, Ezekiel established a studio in Rome at the ancient Baths of Diocletian, where, amidst his works of art, he displayed a large Confederate Battle Flag for forty years. Among many visitors and admirers were President Ulysses S. Grant, the US Ambassador to Italy, native Virginian Thomas Nelson Page, the composer Franz Liszt, and Gustave Adolf, Cardinal Prince of Hohenlohe-Schillingsfürst, both of whom he would later memorialize through his art.

The Cardinal Prince introduced Ezekiel to Liszt, with whom Ezekiel shared the title "Ritter Von" and who became one of Ezekiel's closest friends. The Cardinal Prince arranged for Ezekiel to stay at his villa (the Villa D'Este) in Tivoli, where Liszt would visit to sit for Ezekiel. During Ezekiel's stay, Liszt would visit daily; of him, Ezekiel would write, "[he] was particularly kind to me at all times." He would also recall, in his memoirs, a charming anecdote of Liszt's humor during their portrait sittings. To any visitor who would visit them during these sittings, Liszt would merrily remark, "Yes, you may come in, but we want no criticism! An artist must be left alone to do himself what he wants, without any suggestions. After the work is done, there is time enough to talk." When Liszt died in August of 1886, Ezekiel would recall, "this was a sudden and terrible blow to me. I could hardly realize the truth and lay awake thinking about the Master and the many years of happy communion I had enjoyed with him." Ezekiel would personally arrange a commemoration at the Villa D'Este, sending telegrams to all of the composer's friends in Rome to mourn the Master, who claimed Ezekiel as one of his dear friends and warmly supported his artistic pursuits.

In line with his German training, Ezekiel's sculptures exhibited a distinct romantic style consonant with the burgeoning school of German Romanticism. Though this style incorporated classical figures and themes, these figures often portrayed powerful emotions, embodied by richly-ornamented, often iconographic figures. Ezekiel would often create sculptures of present figures employing these themes, as illustrated by his bust of Rabbi Isaac Mayer Wise, one of the profound influences on Reformed Judaism in America.

In 1899, Ezekiel would expand upon these themes further with a bronze of Thomas Jefferson reading the Declaration of Independence. Jefferson is surrounded by the personified forms of "Liberty, Equality, Justice, and the Brotherhood of Man." This was a commission by the City of Louisville, Kentucky, later replicated at The University of Virginia.

These sculptures represent only a few of his more than two hundred works, which also include the bronze statue of Thomas J. "Stonewall" Jackson in Charleston, West Virginia, a statue of Edgar Allan Poe, and the monument "Southern." "Southern" was commissioned for yet another Federal cemetery to Confederate prisoners of war who died at Johnson's Island, Ohio. In 1900, he donated "Virginia Mourning Her Dead" to his alma mater, VMI, in honor of the cadets who served with him at the Battle of New Market in 1864. The remains of six cadets, one of whom (Thomas Garland Jefferson) died in Ezekiel's arms, are set in a copper box in the foundation of the monument. Ezekiel had produced the cast of this sculpture in 1869 to commemorate his fallen comrades and, when VMI commissioned it in bronze, he wrote:

"It was ... one of the most sacred duties of my life to remodel my bronze statue ... to be placed on the parade grounds of the VMI, overlooking the graves of my dead comrades so that their memory may go on in imperishable bronze, sounding their heroism and Virginia's memory down through all ages and forever."

Fourteen years after the unveiling of "Virginia Mourning Her Dead," Ezekiel would receive his last and greatest commission. As a result of fundraising by private groups, including the United Daughters of the Confederacy, several organizations of Union veterans, and direct contributions from a number of former Union officers, Ezekiel produced the monument he called "New South," to overlook the graves of fallen Southern soldiers at Arlington National Cemetery. In 1914, the monument was dedicated and accepted as a memorial for the Southern war dead, on behalf of the US government, by President Woodrow Wilson.

Ezekiel lies buried at the foot of his masterwork, a thirty-two-foot-high bronze monument surrounded by hundreds of graves of American veterans who fought for their States. He would call this work the "crowning achievement of my career." Beneath the monument, Ezekiel's modest plaque reads, "Moses J. Ezekiel, Sergeant of Company C., Battalion of Cadets of the Virginia Military Institute."

Ezekiel's funeral ceremony, held in 1921, was the first held in the new amphitheater at Arlington; it was presided over by US Secretary of War John W. Weeks. Ezekiel had died in 1917 in Rome, but the first World War had delayed the return of his body to Virginia. To honor Ezekiel's return to his native soil, the US Marine band played a composition, Love's Dream, by his close friend, the composer Franz Liszt. President Warren G. Harding conveyed a message, describing Ezekiel as "a great Virginian, a great artist, a great American, and a great citizen of mankind." Another eulogist, Sampson D. Oppenheim would write of him, "the exigencies of his art made it necessary for Moses Ezekiel to reside far from his native land, but he never forgot he was a Virginian, an American, a Jew."

More than twenty years ago, I had the honor to chair the annual memorial services held at Jackson Circle the first Sunday of every June. At that time, the cemetery's superintendent informed me the Ezekiel monument was in a fragile state due to corrosion caused by acid rain and aging. The cemetery was lacking in funds to restore the monument. A number of friends in heritage organizations joined me in raising the $40,000 necessary to prevent the memorial from collapsing. Should the recommendation to remove the memorial from Arlington be followed, there would be a high likelihood of its destruction.

It is this majestic memorial to American war dead from the South that the Naming Commission now proposes to remove. To do so would not only efface a great work of art but would also efface the memory of America's first internationally-acclaimed Jewish artist. Encouraged to make a name for himself and for his people by Robert E. Lee, Ezekiel would write:

"The race to which I belong had been oppressed and looked down upon through so many ages, I felt that I had a mission to perform. That mission was to show that, as the only Jew born in America up to that time who had dedicated himself to sculpture, I owed it to myself to succeed in doing something worthy in spite of all the difficulties and trials to which I was subjected."

Six American presidents — Ulysses S. Grant, William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft, Woodrow Wilson, and Warren G. Harding — honored Ezekiel and the Southern war dead. They recognized him as one of America's greatest artists, honored his memory, and proclaimed him a great American. Until very recently, every president since 1914 has sent a wreath to Ezekiel's monument in honor of the valor of Southern soldiers buried at Arlington and in honor of the man who memorialized them.

Ezekiel would write of the cause for which he fought, "In reality, no one in the South would have raised an arm to fight for slavery. It was an evil we had inherited and wanted to get rid of. Our struggle was simply a constitutional one, based upon state's rights, and especially on free trade, and no tariff."

Ignorant of Ezekiel's words and accomplishments, Seidule and the Naming Commission have now chosen to denigrate his memory by removing the memorial that marks the climax of his achievements. By doing so, they claim great Jewish-Americans like Moses Ezekiel and the millions of Americans who are descendants of Confederate veterans are un-American. Just as President Biden characterized Trump supporters as un-American “riotous mob, insurrectionists, [and] domestic terrorists,” so too have Seidule and the Naming Commission justified the removal of Ezekiel’s monument by claiming it honors nothing more than insurrectionists, unworthy of name or any place in “American” society. They have subsumed Ezekiel, his proud Jewish and Southern heritage, and his accomplishments to the fervor of their own fetid dissent for any opinion or value dissonant with their own.

Ezekiel’s Confederate monument at Arlington, conceived as a funerary tribute to American Southern war dead and their service to their states, is the guardian of the graveyard at Jackson Circle, which includes six cadets, who served at the Virginia Military Institute as cadet captains. Two other VMI cadets are buried nearby, including future Marine Commandant, Randolph McCall Pate, himself a descendant of a Confederate veteran. Nearly 100 million Americans are descended from ancestors who served the Confederacy. If not all, a vast majority of these Americans are proud of their kinship and the courage of their ancestors. By what moral authority do today’s “woke” military and Congress threaten to remove the memorial which honors their graves? Has this elite of leftist usurpers taken unto itself the right to determine who is and who is not an American? Is this a question to be determined by political litmus test? Are we not all Americans?

Seidule and his fellow members on the Naming Commission propose to strip from both Ezekiel and millions of Americans the ability to honor their comrades and ancestors. In ancient Greece and Rome, desecrating the monuments, graves, and bodies of the dead was considered a crime punishable by death. In The Suppliants by Euripides, Aethra, the mother of Theseus, begs her son to retrieve the bodies of the dead sons of mothers from Argos. These men stood against the Athenians and Creon, who invaded Thebes and who now disallows their burial. Yet, Creon’s defiance arouses the ire of Theseus, who brings the Athenians to the gates of Thebes and threatens war lest the bodies of the dead are returned to their families. As Theseus’s noble act reveals, heroism and the universal importance of honoring the dead are more important than political allegiances. Washing the bodies of strangers, some even his enemies, Theseus represents the man whose virtue guides his politics, rather than the reverse.

Dedicated to eradicating the memories of those whose values do not align with their own, men like Seidule seek to strip those unlike them of their humanity. It is not enough to drag the names of their perceived enemies through the mud, nor is it enough to kill them. Instead, echoing the words of the great French classicist J.P. Vernant, men like Seidule wish to “disfigur[e] and debas[e] ... the dead opponen[t], so as to deny him access to the memory of men to come. [W]hat is most important is not to kill one’s enemy but to deprive him of a beautiful death.” Even in his futile quest for vengeance against Hector, the warrior Achilles honored the father of Hector’s wife Andromache. He honored the body and built a tomb over its ashes. Yet, Seidule and the Naming Commission wish to remove from future generations the ability to know and honor their forebears in the name of a leftist ideological fanaticism. Removing the man from the work he loved most is their idea of “conciliation,” and the climax of their hatred for the military history and traditions they have inherited. Moses Ezekiel and his masterwork at Arlington National Cemetery deserve a better fate from their fellow Americans.

Daniel Pratt's Support of the Confederacy

Courtesy of Prattville Dragoons Camp 1524, Prattville, Alabama

At the main intersection in Prattville, Alabama, where Prattville's Main Street crosses US Highway 31, there is a historical marker with the title "Pratt Gin Factory." The last sentence on the marker states, "Pratt's many industries were of great aid to Confederacy during Northern blockade." Daniel Pratt was indeed, besides being one of the foremost industrialists in the South, one of the foremost supporters of the Confederate States of America. This article explains why this is so.

Pratt's Early Life

Daniel Pratt was born in 1799 and grew up in Temple, New Hampshire. He received only a grade-school education but was, according to his father, a "mechanical genius." For this reason, when Pratt was 16 years old his father apprenticed him to Aaron Putnam, a house carpenter in the nearby town of Wilton. Apparently, Pratt was the genius his father estimated him to be, because after four years as a carpenter apprentice, he came south to Savannah, Georgia, at the age of 20 in 1819, and became a well-known and sought-after builder of houses there. Some of the homes he built can still be seen today.

Gin Manufacturer

While in Georgia, Pratt met and was employed by cotton gin manufacturer Samuel Griswold, became his partner, and then undertook the manufacture of gins on his own. Just as he had done as a builder of homes, Pratt achieved both fame and fortune as a manufacturer of cotton gins. By the 1850s, he had moved to Alabama, to the present site of Prattville, and had the largest gin factory in the world, shipping gins to all the industrialized areas of the world, from Europe to Latin America, in addition to large sales within the United States. Then came the War Between The States.

Pratt's Views On Important Topics Of His Time

Like Jefferson Davis, Pratt was not in favor of immediate secession, though he had no doubt it was permissible under the Constitution. In fact, if we look at the principal leaders within the Confederate government we see most were moderates who did not believe immediate secession was wise and, in fact, could lead to disaster for the South. Pratt thought the South should spend a decade building up its industrial infrastructure before asserting its constitutional right to secede. In his view, the South would be fighting the only kind of war sanctioned by Christianity: a war of self-defense. But it required preparation. ...

Pratt's plan for the South before the War, as he described it in a letter to the American Cotton Planter in 1859, was "the South ought to maintain her rights at all hazards," but that "I would pursue a somewhat different course from that of our politicians." He believed the South should spend ten years building up her manufacturing and other commercial enterprises, stop making "flaming fiery speeches and threats," and instead "to go quietly and peaceably to work, and make ourselves less dependent on those who abuse and would gladly ruin us."

In September 1863, while a state legislator trying to encourage his fellow citizens following the losses at Gettysburg and Vicksburg, Pratt wrote a letter in the Autauga Citizen, asking Alabamians, "Are you willing to live under a government you can have no control over, and be taxed to the last dollar to pay for the loss of all that was near and dear to you?" This is what surrender meant, and Pratt knew it.

Regarding slavery, Pratt believed there were three reasons for slavery — two practical and one religious. 1) The South's economy would have collapsed without slavery to gather and ship cotton, a joint enterprise between the North which provided the slaves and the South which used them. 2) Slavery improved the lives of black people, from a primitive one to a more civilized one. He believed this is why the American Colonization Society, which Abraham Lincoln supported, did not achieve its goal of repatriating the Africans; the slaves saw the benefits they had received and did not wish to return to their native lands. 3) Slavery was not prohibited by God's law, in Pratt's view. He saw slavery as God's way of Christianizing Africans and bettering their lot in life. He asserted the Bible tells the servant to be faithful to his master, and nowhere does it condemn slavery, neither in the Old Testament nor the New. Pratt understood too that originally slavery was legal in all states, including his home state of New Hampshire; it was only those states which found it unprofitable that eventually outlawed it.

Regarding Reconstruction, Pratt was entirely opposed to it, to the end of his days. Before all else, he was a practical man. To give the vote to ex-slaves, many of whom were unable to read and write, while at the same time disenfranchising all men who had served in the Confederacy in any capacity, which would mean almost all white men in the defeated states, was simply not a practical or just thing to do, in his view.

Political Life

Pratt did not care for politics, but once he realized he was recognized as a leader in industrial and political matters and was urged by men he respected to do so, he ran for office at the local and state level. He was elected by a large majority to serve as representative for Autauga County in the Alabama Legislature from 1861 to 1863. He was also proposed as candidate for governor in 1870 but lost to a younger candidate (Lindsay). He was elected Intendant (mayor) of Prattville in 1866 and held that office until his death in 1873. Aside from his political life, Pratt has also been credited with providing the design for the Alabama State Capitol Building constructed in 1850-1851, the central building of the Capitol we see in Montgomery today.

War Between the States

When secession was voted on and approved by the people of the State of Alabama, Pratt joined the effort wholeheartedly, helping to recruit and outfit the first Confederate unit to leave Autauga County, the Prattville Dragoons. He spoke at meetings around Autauga County, offering all support possible to men who volunteered to fight for the Confederacy. His help in outfitting the Prattville Dragoons included providing them horses, equipment, and fine black uniforms which sometimes caused Dragoons to be mistaken for officers. Pratt also provided funds for outfitting other Autauga County units, and his wife Esther was president of the Ladies' Aid Society in Prattville, which made clothing for soldiers.

With respect to his business, the departure of working men to fight the war was a setback. He lost twelve employees when the Dragoons mustered and rode away to war, and fifteen more when his nephew Merrill formed Company K of the 1st Alabama Regiment and went away to defend the Confederate States. A year later, he managed to get some of these men transferred back home by sending a request to Governor John Gill Shorter. Governor Shorter requested General Braxton Bragg transfer some of Pratt's workers back to Prattville, stating the Prattville Manufacturing Compa-

The South Carolina Signers Monument on Secession Hill

By Robert B. Hayes, Olde Abbeville Camp 39, Abbeville, SC

In 2018 when many Confederate monuments across our Southland were being removed, damaged or defaced, one was being placed on a piece of historical ground in Abbeville, South Carolina.

Before this information is provided to the reader, perhaps a very brief history of South Carolina will lay the groundwork for an understanding of those not familiar with this small Southern state and the mindset of her people.

Origin of the South Carolina Colony

In 1665 King Charles II of England gave the colony to eight men of royalty — earls, dukes, lords, etc. They were referred to as the Lord Proprietors. The colony was settled in 1670 at Charles Town, now Charleston. The proprietors, not the king, appointed the governors of the colony. The first settlers included some Barbadians, who had been only marginally governed by the king. Within ten years a large number of Huguenots came to the colony. Both groups were strongly independently minded people and had some influence on other settlers. From almost the beginning of the colony there was conflict between the settlers and the proprietors and there were faults on both sides. In 1715 the Yemassee Indians attacked the colonists and came very close to eliminating the colony. There was also the problem with pirate attacks. Colonists did not believe the proprietors had provided them with sufficient protection. Governor Robert Johnson was a relatively respected young man, but the colonists informed him in December of 1719 they would no longer take orders from him and had appealed to the king to make South Carolina a royal colony. He did what a good employee would do, protect the interest of his employers, the proprietors and he ordered the militia to disband. When they pointed their muskets at him, he thought it best to return to his plantation. It took the king ten years to buy out all the proprietors and he then appointed his first royal governor, Robert Johnson. Therefore, Johnson was the last proprietary and the first royal governor. Though it was a peaceful transfer of, historians designate this action of the colonists as a revolution, because it changed their form of government. Just forty-nine years after her creation, South Carolina was the first colony to have a revolution! It's in our DNA!

A Sovereign State and Secession

In 1832, the South Carolina legislature passed the Ordinance of Nullification of the Tariff of Abomination. Congress, at the urging of President Jackson, passed the Force Bill which would force South Carolina to pay the unfair and unconstitutional tariff. South Carolina was faced with submission or secession. Henry Clay and John C. Calhoun worked out a compromise which would diminish the tariff incrementally over a ten year period; therefore, the state legislature repealed the ordinance of nullification of the tariff, but then passed a bill nullifying the Force Bill. It's in our DNA!

Certainly most, if not all, readers know South Carolina was the first state to pass an Ordinance of Secession. The South Carolina legislature was in session when word came Lincoln had been elected on 6 November 1860. They had already discussed what they should do if he was elected. Lincoln had campaigned on high tariffs and internal improvements, which Southerners understood to be primarily for Northern interest, but financed by Southern taxes. It is not surprising South Carolinians clearly saw the writing on the wall. The SC legislature created a secession committee, which sent word to the 25 districts (They were designated as counties in 1868.) to select delegates to meet in convention in the state capital, Columbia, on 17 December 1860, to decide the fate of the state. Would she stay in the union or would she exercise her sovereignty and constitutional right to secede and govern herself?

Decision on Magazine Hill

Chesterfield District, the home of the SCV First In Secession Camp 1963, held the first secession meeting 19 November to select delegates for the state's secession convention. But Abbeville District claims to have held the first "mass" meeting to select delegates. On Wednesday 14 November at the Abbeville courthouse, 21 men of prominence — plantation owners, doctors, lawyers, businessmen, etc., who referred to themselves as the Committee of Twenty-one — had posters made and distributed across the district announcing a mass meeting to be held on Thursday 22 November. The committee selected a location at the bottom of Magazine Hill, so named because the powder magazine many years prior had been located about an eighth of a mile higher up the hill. The magazine had not been in existence for many years, but the name Magazine Hill still persists to this day and Magazine Street will take you to the site of the old magazine. The branch depot of the Columbia-Greenville railroad ended and was located just across the road from the meeting place, convenient for those coming in on the train and is probably the reason the committee selected the site. The committee invited many prominent men from the state such as Judge Magrath of Charleston, James Chestnut, later military advisor to President Davis, and even US Sen. Robert Toombs of Georgia, though he could not attend. The poster informed the public that a band of music had been engaged to perform during the day and also that night. The committee also had a speaker's platform constructed on the site. On

The Unknown Soldier of Secession Hill

By Robert B. Hayes

Here lies a very special noble soul
His many sacrifices never told
This war to him, a very bitter pill
To his beloved homeland of Alabama
He pledged his loyalty without a stammer
The Unknown Soldier of Secession Hill

To defend his dear state, off to war he went
And obeyed all orders without descent
He had volunteered with free-will
And fought with Jackson, Hampton and Lee
And suffered many hardships in order to be free
The Unknown Soldier of Secession Hill

Of his loved ones at home he often thought
It was for them and his Southland he fought Yankee hoards who wished to force their will
Upon the Southern people they despised
Not dominion of man, but the Lord his prize
The Unknown Soldier of Secession Hill

This young man from Alabama did his best
To do his duty, he could not do less
He pledged his life and would do so still
But fate had deemed that freedom was lost
He tried to return to his family, no matter the cost
The Unknown Soldier of Secession Hill

No Yankee bullet ever found him
But his life's light was growing dim
He was homeward bound in this town of Abbeville
But he would soon lose grip of life's cord
And go home to meet his Lord
The Unknown Soldier of Secession Hill

The Petersburg Regiment in the Civil War: A History of the 12th Virginia Infantry from John Brown's Hanging to Appomattox, 1859-1865

A regiment is the backbone of a military organization. A soldier was mustered into a regiment, regiments formed brigades, did picket duty, and fought in battles. John Horn takes a fresh look at the 12th Virginia Infantry in The Petersburg Regiment in the Civil War.

While known as the Petersburg Regiment, not all of the regiment's companies came from the Cockade City. They were, however, from the surrounding areas, like Dinwiddie and Norfolk. The regiment was formed in May 1861 in Norfolk, although portions of the regiment came from pre-war militia companies, some of which had witnessed the execution of John Brown. After formation, the regiment was attached to the brigade of William Mahone, later under the command of David A. Weisiger after Mahone's promotion to division command. For almost four years, the 12th Virginia saw action in numerous battles, including Seven Pines, Malvern Hill, Second Manassas, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, the Overland Campaign, and various battles of the Petersburg campaign, like Jerusalem Plank Road, the Crater, Globe Tavern, and Burgess Mill. At Appomattox, the regiment surrendered 201 men and officers.

Horn tackles the history of the 12th Virginia in a very readable style, covering each battle and the role the regiment played in the battle in detail. A plethora of expertly crafted maps accompany each battle, showing where the regiment was located at the time of the action. There are also several war-time photographs of soldiers who served in the regiment. Good footnotes are a welcome addition, although Horn only seems to cite direct quotations. A bibliography and index round out the tome.

Overall, The Petersburg Regiment in the Civil War is recommended.

The Last Words: The Farewell Addresses of Union and Confederate Commanders To Their Men At The End of the War Between The States

Dr. Bradley continues to produce outstanding books on the War Between the States. This is another in a series of superlative works and serves a number of purposes. While many commanders of note on both sides gave farewell addresses, only a few survived in written form. As is pointed-out in the book, the demobilization of the armies, particularly the Confederate Army in short order after the end of hostilities, meant many men were dispersed without hearing their commanders farewell them. In the rush to demobilize, not many thought to record the addresses to the men, especially if the commanders spoke extemporaneously. That said, locating extant copies of farewells is limited to key commanders whose words were recorded for posterity. This book gives the addresses of seventeen commanders. Nine are US and eight are CS commanders.

The Prologue by Gene Kizer is an attention-getter. Every Southerner should arm themselves with the facts in this excellent lead-in to the commanders' addresses. In light of current "cancel culture" events, this Prologue concisely illuminates the facts of why Southerners fought. It is not what is taught in the PC school curriculums across our country. It is hard-hitting and focused on what we need to counter the arguments constantly posited by "those people."

What the commanders on both sides almost unanimously do is thank their soldiers for their service. A common theme is recounting the mutual hardships experienced and wishing the soldiers well in their future endeavors. What is not discussed are politics. In fact, Lt. General Nathan Forrest encourages his soldiers to bury their animosities and become good citizens of the reunited country in order to engender "magnanimous" treatment. Of course this was written prior to the institution of "Reconstruction" by the radical Republicans. Major General George Meade wrote of "devotion to ... country, ... patience and cheerfulness under all the privations and sacrifices." Additionally, he spoke of why the war was fought — and it was not about slavery. In fact, only one US commander even mentioned slavery.

FORREST'S LAST RIDE

Forrest's Last Ride is the name of the project to reconstruct the gravesite of Lieutenant General Nathan Bedford Forrest and his wife Mary Ann Montgomery Forrest on the grounds of Historic Elm Springs and the National Confederate Museum. This will be a very large project as the plaza is 50 feet deep and 75 feet wide. Everything that was with the graves is now on the grounds and waiting to be reconstructed. The Equestrian Statue, which is the headstone of the graves will be repaired and returned to its rightful place. This project is for the repair, reconstruction, and placement of the Forrest Gravesite in its entirety and as intended by the artist Charles Henry Neihaus.

On September 18, 2021, we gathered to lay to rest, Lt. Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest and his wife Mary Ann Montgomery Forrest on the grounds of Historic Elm Springs. On October 1, 2022, the General Executive Council voted to rebuild the entire plaza as it was originally constructed. The estimated cost to reconstruct the entire plaza is $150,000. Currently, $76,000 has already been raised. This project is being done by the great-great-grandsons of General Forrest and the General Executive Council.

This cannot happen without your help and donations. This cannot be built until the money has been raised. If you wish to contribute, please send your donations to SCV National.

To pay by check:

Please make your check payable to SCV National with Forrest Plaza in the memo line and mail to:

THE SOCIETY OF THE ORDER OF THE SOUTHERN CROSS

Financial Assistance for Preservation Projects

The Order of the Southern Cross, founded in 1863 by Maj. Gen. Patrick Cleburne, Lt. Gen. Leonidas Polk, and Rev. Charles Quintard, was originally created to foster brotherhood and to provide financial assistance to the families of soldiers who had lost their lives in the service of the Confederacy.

The Order of the Southern Cross was re-established in 1979 as a philanthropic organization, dedicated to preserving our Southern Heritage through its Grants and Scholarship Programs. Since 1979, the Order has allocated more than $1 million to these endeavors.

If your SCV Camp or 501(c)3 organization is seeking financial assistance to help fund a Confederate preservation project, we encourage you to contact the Chairman of our Grants Committee, Richard Smoot, at resp1n@flash.net or visit our website for more information.

Reports are generally due by April 1, 2023. However, if there is a reason a report should be submitted later than April 1, 2023, such as the Division commander wishes to include a report on their Division Reunion for the report, senders may delay the submission, but should submit the report no later than five days after the close of convention or other event or activity which will be included in the report. In any event, no report should be submitted later than June 1, 2023.

Reports should be submitted to Editor-in-Chief Frank Powell at fbpowell@bellsouth.net and Chief of Staff Darrell L. Maples at pvtmape@embarqmail.com.

Museum artifact donations and Confederate images

The SCV is asking for worthy donations of Confederate and SCV historical items for our museum. Please contact us at exedir@scv.org for donations or loans before sending them to GHQ.

In addition, we would like to collect images of all our Confederate veterans. Please send images of your ancestor to membership@scv.org or PO Box 59, Columbia, TN 38402. Please annotate the name, rank, unit, and as much information as you can about the individual(s) you are submitting. These will be available for perpetual research for our visitors and members as well as use in the museum.

Headquarters needs more e-mail addresses

All, this is a request from membership at HQ. Of the 30,000 members in our database, we only have 15,000 e-mail addresses. In order to reach as many as possible with this format, I need everyone's correct e-mail address.

I'm asking all camps get e-mail addresses for all members. We understand not everyone has an e-mail address, but most do. Once they have, please e-mail the list to membership@scv.org. Doing this will help HQ serve everyone better. I thank you all for your service.

Dispatches From the Front

Ammon Bundy have felt compelled to speak up and protest against the colonization of the West by a central government?

The introduction of a non-native species of wolves by the central government into the Idaho wilderness has financially destroyed the outfitters, hunting guides, and packers as the wild canines in one decade nearly consumed all of the 20,000 elk in this part of Central Idaho. These actions have destroyed the local culture. It used to be common most men in the Northwest had the knowledge to throw a diamond hitch on a mule, rope and brand calves, along with experiences in logging, placer mining, carpentry, etc.

So it is safe to say a third generation Idaho or Montana native or any individual in the Northwest who actually derives their existence from the land and its resources feels a kinship with the plight of the Southerner.

Here in the Northwest I unflinchingly continue to defend the same principles of self-government and State Sovereignty which compelled the South in their fight against centralism. Many of the new arrivals to our area have fled here for the same underlying reasons. They are open to an alternative historical perspective in regard to the WBTS.

In closing, do not give ground on the Battle Flag for it will not bring a peaceful resolution. Never! Never! Surrender any symbol of the South's history to the Orwellian "Ministry of Truth" which seeks to destroy all remnants of the past which will weaken its "cause" in establishing centralized, globalized, totalitarianism.

Has ideas for our country's future

To the editor:

Quoting President Davis, "The principle for which we contend is bound to reassert itself, though it may be at another time and in another form."

It is clear to anybody paying attention the North and South have once again drifted apart to the point of appearing as different countries. The larger population of the North allows them to railroad unjust and unconstitutional laws on the South, inflict never-ending government overreach, and impose reckless spending which is destroying the economy. Government overreach is among the worst threats to our rights and liberty. I still believe in the right of secession, but to do so would be far more complicated than it was in 1861 even if it was done peacefully. Most of the goals of secession might be accomplished by a partial secession, that is, the formation of a special administrative region with a relationship with the North similar to what existed between Hong Kong and mainland China before the CCP violated it.

Thus, a Confederate States Special Administrative Region would remain part of the United Socialist States, but we would be free to make our own laws, collect our own taxes, and manage our own money. Social security money owed to retirees would be handled by a negotiated agreement, as would be the disposition of oil and oil revenues from Texas and Louisiana. The latter could give us substantial leverage in negotiations. Most likely, we would save enough on reckless spending taxes (by the North) to take over social security and medicare/medicaid payments which are already owed, while transitioning young people to our own retirement system, perhaps based on Singapore's model.

We might share a common currency and a common military as part of the commonwealth agreement, and we should offer to pay our proportionate share of the national debt incurred through 2020. The Yankees are on their own for the results of their subsequent reckless spending.

There would be free trade and free travel between the regions, except criminals and troublemakers (BLM, ANTIFA, etc.) would be turned back at the border. Federal government agencies would have no authority in the SAR unless specifically authorized by the SAR or the states within. This would prevent the IRS from snooping into Southern bank accounts, the EPA from taking a farmer's land as a "wetland" because of a mud puddle; abuses by the FBI, etc.

The "Patriot Act" would be effectively nullified in the South. We would also be free to run Dixie as a Christian nation, while respecting the right to worship by other religions. We would not be forced to legalize "recreational" drugs, or tolerate sodomy and other sinful behavior. As a Christian nation we might escape the coming wrath of God which has been earned by the North. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you. 2 Corinthians 6:17

We can work to recruit new younger members

To the Editor:

I became a member of the SCV a few years ago, and I'm excited to continue membership. I understand across the board, many organizations and institutions are struggling to find members, especially younger members. There can and probably are many opinions and ideas on gaining new members for the SCV cause. I wish to chip in my young and novice opinion with all due respect.

As I look around, one of the greatest needs in our country, and for the Sons of Confederate Veterans, is to form and shape faithful men. We should not only do this for the good of our respective state, our Southern way of life, and our country but also for our fellow man and future children. Suppose the SCV invested in a program or a means to instruct, inspire, and build up virtuous young southern men. In that case, you would find a new avenue of potential recruits: men looking for someone to guide them into being honorable men.

I understand many outside resources, programs, and websites exist to equip men, regardless of age, to be honorable men. Yet, this shouldn't prevent us from doing our bit. We should be adventurous and not outsource our men to those resources alone when we can be in a position also to help them ourselves. I hope and pray the SCV will not only hop on this bandwagon but help drive it! Was not the South once known for regarding honor in high esteem? Did not our beloved native land produce such faithful men as Robert E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, Audie Murphy, and Alvin York? Do we not sell their busts as Southern heroes as a source of inspiration? Therefore, should we not just point to the heroes but also help our men be like those heroes?

There is a great need within our native land to preserve our Southern culture by producing fine men. The SCV should step up and help our men, of whom I count myself. If the SCV could pull its collective wisdom together, we can be a service and a means of saving our southern men before it's too late.

We can do this by being more attentive to our Southern culture and history regarding Southern masculinity, honor, and virtue. We can acknowledge its shortcomings while pointing out its strength. Suppose we can provide resources and directions for our camps. In that case, they can provide mentorship and guidance for young SCV men across the country. The SCV could challenge our branches by encouraging physical fitness, knowledge in a particular skill or study, or something else entirely. We can find our niche in the growing renaissance of what it means to be a man if we pull our minds together as the Sons of Confederate Veterans.

I urge the honorable men of SCV, and you, dear editor, to consider this matter. With patience, diligence, and the calling of young Southern men, our numbers, Lord willing, will grow.

Will always defend the Southern flag

To the Editor:

In "Dispatches From the Front" November/December 2022, Mr. David Lohnes writes in support for the USA pledge of allegiance. This was a pledge started by a Marxist minister named Bellamy.

He was run out of the pulpit but his pledge survived.

Jefferson would have disagreed on the part about indivisible and as Mr Kennedy advocates a forceful approach to saving Southern heritage, the question remains whether legal force or physical force. I'm a bit of a moderate but will defend the Southern flag even if it means secession again as in #texit. A national divorce is needed.

Is in favor of both organizations

To the Editor:

I would like to respond to Mr. Howard Tally, III's letter that was in the most recent issue of the Confederate Veteran magazine. He is hoping all organizations which support and honor all things Southern will work together. First I wish to assure Mr. Tally I was alive and well during those years. I am still striving to do my part to support the SCV. Last year, with the assistance of some camp members, we built the largest display cabinet which has been donated to our museum. When other projects are completed, I am committed to building another display unit which has been asked for by some of the museum staff. I suspect there are many more members who could use their "God Given" talents and abilities to help the SCV! I have always believed, "the greatest warrior to ever straddle a horse" always led from the front! I believe all worthwhile leaders should "lead from the front." My Dad, was born in 1897 and lived with one of our "Forrest Veterans" for three and a half years after his mother died. He lived almost ninety-eight years and often talked about our three Forrest Veterans and many other Confederate Veterans he had known. I was raised a "proud Confederate American!"

Now about that "bad blood." I am very much in favor of again working with the MOS&B to defend all things Southern and appreciate our CIC and Lt. CIC having the courage to initiate that action. It is my humble opinion that a few members of the MOS&B, with higher than normal ambitions and intentions, were responsible for many of those troubles. My only advice to our leaders is to be alert for a "Flank Attack." Mr. Forrest was the master of using surprise flank attacks against his foes. Both organizations should reserve that maneuver for use on our real antagonists but not against each other! If we can work together, I might even reconsider joining the MOS&B.

Mr. Tally, I sincerely hope my words serve to "steel" you and other members determination and desire to serve our organization. There is usually a place for all who desire to serve. I must tell you that when I served in leadership positions, we always had members who survived on their inflated ego and supposed importance. It seems they either had to have their way or the highway! I spent too many agonizing hours as a peacemaker, a soother of ruffled feelings and heated passions, a judge, a jury, a coach, a cheerleader, and ultimately a believer in the frailty of mankind. God did not make us perfect, just human! Please overlook any perceived bias I may have exhibited as I did what I thought was right and just at the time. And, I still pay my dues!

You and others may think I am older than some oak trees or even some rocks. That is absolutely not true! Next April I will be the youngest eighty year old man around! My memory may not be what it once was but is still very clear concerning those troubled years. I love God, my family, and the SCV, in that order, and still enjoy church activities, family get-to-gathers, speaking to various groups, reading about our noble ancestors, trying to grow a garden, and woodworking. I am very thankful God gave me that "long life gene" he gave my "Dear Ole Dad!"

Are you familiar with the old comedy routine about "Who?" Sometimes, we all wonder if "Who" is in charge, when actually, "Who" might be on first base and trying like the dickens to "run the bases!"

Hang in there! See you in Hot Springs!

None of the Confederates mentioned it as a reason for fighting. The common theme with the US commanders was the war was about "union." Major General Hoke (CS) spoke of fighting to rid the South of centralized, federal power. This was not uncommon. The reasons the soldiers fought were largely divorced from the political reasons of the war however.

Each commanders' address is given with an analysis by Dr. Bradley. The seventeen authors of the addresses are discussed with a brief overview of their military service and the perspective from which they wrote their farewells. "The Epilogue: Why did they fight?" is an articulate and short discussion on why the soldiers themselves say they fought. This goes hand-in-hand with Dr. James McPherson's findings in his extensive study recorded in For Cause and Comrade. McPherson reiterates that for the Northerners it was "union." For the Southerners, he said it was "liberty." Bradley largely reinforces this finding by McPherson. Appendices add pertinent context information about the six Union slave states and the ordinances of secession for Arkansas and Alabama with short extracts of each.

This is an exemplary book which not only informs but gives basis for more detailed study for true students of the war. It is a great resource. I always contend there is more to learn, even for those of us who have studied this topic for years. Dr. Bradley shows again that his work adds significantly to our body of knowledge of the war and we owe him a debt of gratitude for continuing to publish scholarly studies such as The Last Words.

Calhoun, A Statesman for the 21st Century

John Calhoun so often glowers out at us from History, a cadaverous "cast iron man" with a shock of unkempt white hair who was architect of Nullification. The fact is Calhoun (properly pronounced "Culhoun") is one of the most important political figures in the US for 40 years, serving as Representative, Senator, and Secretary of both War and State at different times. Calhoun holds an almost unique distinction: He serves as Vice President of the United States under two presidents, John Quincy Adams and Andrew Jackson. Dr. Clyde Wilson's newest work, Calhoun: A Statesman For the 21st Century, gives us a vibrant and furthermore relevant Calhoun for the 21st Century. Taken from Dr. Wilson's lectures and essays, this is a compelling overview of the only truly original political thinker of the Second Generation. Wilson, probably the most-read living human being on Calhoun, as publisher of the John Calhoun Papers, is uniquely qualified to give us this relevant Calhoun.

Rather than being the "cast iron man" the Conventional Wisdom portrays him as, Wilson gives us a Calhoun who opines on many of the important political subjects of the day and who also plays an important role in crafting sustainable policy. For example, he spends a great deal of the 1830s and 40s involved in the great economic debates of the era, taking a distinct and Jeffersonian view of the role of a central bank in the American economy. He plays a key role in the chartering of the Second Bank of the United States and accurately predicts the Panic of 1837. Then the so-called "cast iron man" allies with the Democrat Party and plays a role in creating the Independent Treasury which lasted until 1913.

His views on this and other subjects are unique and consider equal benefit to all sections of the 'confederation,' as he calls the US. Dr. Wilson's thesis is Calhoun is fully aware after the 1832 Interposition Crisis he would never be president, and this understanding explains many unpopular stances Calhoun took, including his nuanced economic philosophy and principled pushback on the War with Mexico. He intentionally makes himself prominent in American political discourse and feels liberty to take principled stands his contemporaries don't take, for whatever reasons they decide to not take them.

His commentary on the 1837 "positive good" speech is a fresh and unique perspective. Dr. Wilson makes a compelling case that Whig and Democrat leadership in Congress agreed to not seriously discuss slavery and abolition in the 1830s and 40s. Calhoun therefore stakes out the slavery side of the slavery/abolition debate in stark language because he believes the discussion should not be suppressed. He therefore clearly defines the choices before the American body politic.

Calhoun approaches political thought from a blank piece of paper and considers societies or communities to be the primary building blocks of government; for him, the role of government is to preserve pre-existing society. He turns "no man is an island" into a methodical and comprehensive political philosophy. "States Rights" is a phrase often used to marginalize the 'Southern' view of the Constitution. Really, a more descriptive term for the view is Jeffersonian, as many across what H. L. Mencken referred to as These States in Calhoun's day support the limited view where most powers are reserved by the States.

Senator Calhoun sees his theory of the Concurrent Majority as another check against what he considered the tyranny of the simple majority. He sees the Concurrent Majority as a majority of interests and societies, a way to facilitate government controlled by the virtuous people, not a simple mathematical majority.

I cordially suggest study of Calhoun as essential to understanding the principles which drove our Confederate ancestors to fight. This book is a VERY good starting point for a study of Calhoun's political philosophy.

How Radical Republican Antislavery Rhetoric and Violence Precipitated Secession,
October 1859 – April 1861,
McClellanville, SC

D. Jonathan White has given us a well researched look at how violence, the threat of violence and antislavery rhetoric caused the states of the deep South to move more and more towards secession as a response to the growth of Republican power in the 18 months between the Harper's Ferry raid and the crisis at Ft. Sumter. The shock of the violence some abolitionists were prepared to perpetrate caught the South by surprise. This book is a great resource for those seeking to understand the perspective of the many different groups representing diverse segments of the population in both the North and South.

Immediately after Harpers Ferry, the division in the country was made clear. Many in the North seemed to welcome the violence, while the South began the process of improving state and local readiness for any such future acts of terrorism. It is fascinating to read differing editorials, speeches and letters, the thoughts of men and women during those stressful times. Rumors and false reports in newspapers only made the situation more tense.

Republican support of antislavery violence and terrorism threatened the union. Many in the South saw the fate of the union resting on the ability of conservative Northern Democrats to defeat Black Republicans at the polls. Short of a decisive rejection of these politicians who either supported or tolerated the more radical and violent abolitionists, they saw no hope for the union. Frustration had mounted as these radicals gained more power and refused to enforce laws and provisions of the Constitution with which they disagreed.

Though the majority in the South did not own slaves, they nevertheless saw Northern rejection of the law of the land as a dangerous precedent. Failure to stop the radical Republicans was, in the view of many, tantamount to the North forcing the South to secede.

This book has hundreds of quotes, citations from newspapers, speeches, letters, pamphlets and broadsides which well illustrate the opposing views of many of the groups examined. Unionists, secessionists, abolitionists, Democrats, Constitutional Unionists, Republicans and Black Republicans (referring to their radical nature) all had differing views, not only on slavery, but the use of violence rather than legal means to end it. Political rhetoric was inflaming the passions of many in both the North and the South. It is fascinating to see the changes in attitudes as events unfolded in those months between Harpers Ferry and the formation of the Confederate States of America. Politicians were not adverse to using hyperbole to arouse their supporters and persuade those unsure of the proper course. Mr. White does a very good job in marshaling a vast amount of information into a very readable work, giving the reader a good sense of the attitudes and responses of people, both the North and South, to the threat of terrorism.

It is worth noting, in almost every state, there were groups with different opinions on events during this time period and on what policies governments should pursue. This gave the politicians and newspaper editors audiences eager for the latest news. The fact there had been some attempts at causing a bloody uprising of slaves in the South, which would have affected all the people in the land, as well as rumors of such actions, weighed heavily on the people of the South. Newspapers either fanned the flames of fear or cautioned against the radical act of secession. Often a citizen's opinion of secession not only depended on his devotion to the idea of union, but also to his perception of the threat of a servile insurrection in his state.

It is well known that seven states seceded, yet many Southern states opted to remain in the union. It was not until Lincoln called, unconstitutionally, for troops to invade the seceded states that these states resorted to secession. This shows there was not unanimity in the views of the Southern states on the need for secession until the Federal government's actions removed all doubt. The South quickly rallied to the principles of American self-government.

A list of references at the end of the book should prove useful for those seeking more information on this interesting subject. I highly recommend this book for those who have not taken a detailed look at this aspect of the secession of the South. It will give the reader a better understanding of the atmosphere of that heated time which led the South to seek independence.

People started coming into town the day before the meeting and by mid-morning of the 22nd it was estimated about three thousand people had gathered at the meeting place. There were five or more militia units from across the district. Speeches were made and intermittent music was provided. It was a serious, but also festive event. At some point, the committee retired across the road to the railroad depot to select delegates to represent the Abbeville District. While they were gone, speeches and music were still provided for the multitude. When the committee returned, they announced six men who they had selected to represent the Abbeville District. They were John Alfred Calhoun, a relative of John C. Calhoun, Edward Noble, Thomas Chiles Perrin, Thomas Tomason, David Lewis Wardlaw and John Harris Wilson. The people in attendance demanded that each of the selected delegates stand on the speaker's platform and declare they would vote to secede before they would accept them as their delegates. DNA!

Abbeville's six delegates and one hundred sixty three others across the state gathered at the First Baptist Church in Columbia on 17 December. Thus, the convention would decide South Carolina's path. They selected David F. Jamison, a delegate from the Barnwell District, as president of the convention, but because they received word of a smallpox outbreak in the city they voted to adjourn and move the convention to Charleston. They got on a train the morning of the 18th and reconvened in Charleston about mid-day. On 20 December they voted for the severance of South Carolina from the union. South Carolina secession convention was the only one to vote unanimously on the first vote to secede and the only Southern state not to provide an organized body of troops to the US. Again folks, it's in the DNA. The convention decided to let delegates sign the Ordinance of Secession alphabetically by district; thus, Abbeville's six delegates were the first delegation to sign the ordinance. The origin of the "First in Secession" claim.

Within a few years, the approximate two acres of Magazine Hill where the secession meeting took place became known as Secession Hill and Secession Avenue is adjacent to the property.

Here is an interesting note: After South Carolina seceded and before the Confederacy was formed, David F. Jamison was selected as the Secretary of War for the Republic of South Carolina, the only state to have that public office, though it only lasted a couple of months.

Purchase of Secession Hill

The author moved to Abbeville in July of 2001 to open and manage the Southern Patriot Shop. The merchandise would be politically incorrect, since we would be selling Confederate flags, Confederate shirts and a variety of other Confederate items. We selected this town, because of its claim to the "Cradle and grave of the Confederacy." The "grave," because on 2 May 1865 President Davis held his last council of war in Abbeville. (Neither claim is 100 percent entirely accurate, but good for the chamber of commerce.) We opened in September and in October the author met the owner of Secession Hill and immediately inquired about purchasing the property. The owner never said no, but would not say yes. It required three and a half years of persistent urging and a complicated negotiation. We actually had to buy an antebellum house about a half block up the street and make a trade for the Hill. But finally the owner agreed to make the trade for the two acre piece of property. James Layden, provided the funding and we created the Southern Cultural Center, Inc., which purpose was to promote Southern culture and save historical property such as Secession Hill. We closed on the property Thursday 22 April 2004. The Hill was grossly overgrown by trees, brushes, briars, bamboo, etc. and there was a fairly large dilapidated 1893 house and a small out-building which had to be cleared. The author took on the task and in about fifteen years the Hill has only about thirty selected trees left on the property and no dilapidated houses. The author must give credit to the Olde Abbeville camp members for providing many work days helping him on the Hill.

The Unknown Confederate Soldier

At the bottom northwest corner of this historical piece of land is a circle of rocks, which encircles the grave of an unknown Confederate soldier. A 1939 article in Abbeville Press and Banner had recorded the soldier coming to Abbeville, on his way home, on the branch railroad. He was very sick with smallpox and the only information provided before he died was that he was from Alabama and probably in his mid-thirties. He would have had time to reach Abbeville if he had surrendered with Lee or Johnston. He was buried at the bottom of what is now Secession Hill by two blacks who had survived smallpox, thus had immunity. The day the author found the grave, he made a promise to himself. One day he would have placed on the soldier's grave a tombstone. The author later learned Mrs. Grace Rodgers, who owned the property for a few years, had the circle of rocks (thirteen feet diameter) placed around the soldier's grave. A young man, David Gillaspie, was asked to hand-carve a slate tombstone for the unknown soldier. David used slate from the Buckingham quarry in Virginia, which is considered to be some of the best slate on earth and had been used on Tuckahoe Plantation, the boyhood home of Thomas Jefferson, the Smithsonian Institution, the University of Virginia and Ford's Theater, to name just a few. David's great-great grandfather, Andrew McComb, carved the tombstone for Catherine Calhoun, who was John C. Calhoun's grandmother. (John C. Calhoun was born in the Abbeville District.)

On Saturday 16 May 2015, approximate sesquicentennial of his death, more than a hundred people and re-enactors attended the dedication and unveiling of the beautiful hand-carved tombstone on the grave of the unknown Confederate soldier. There were ladies in black who unveiled the tombstone and placed a wreath on his grave, a cannon and twenty-one gun salutes, a bagpiper, a bugler who played Tattoo, ladies singing and the passing of the canteen ceremony were parts of the dedication. Also present were President Jefferson Davis, Generals Robert E. Lee, Thomas J. "Stonewall" Jackson, James Longstreet and James E. B. "JEB" Stuart. Reporters were present who reported on the event. It is believed no unknown Confederate soldier has such a beautiful tombstone nor a dedication such as the unknown soldier on Secession Hill. May he rest in peace!

There have been two poems written about Secession Hill and two written about the unknown Alabama soldier, one of which was put to music, It's a Long, Long Way to Alabama.

The SC Signers Monument

About 1970, Compatriot Albert Jackson, great grandson of signer Stephen Jackson, decided he would try to locate the graves of the one hundred seventy South Carolinians who signed the Ordinance of Secession. (There were only one hundred sixty-nine at the convention, because one could not attend, but was later allowed to sign.) Albert has visited or has pictures of all but five of the signers graves and they are buried in SC, GA, AL, NC, FL, MS, LA, VA, TX, MD, CA, Canada and England. About one hundred fifty are buried in SC.

Other members of the South Carolina SCV Division, such as Frank Berry, Dennis Todd and Robert Roper joined Albert with a desire to recognize these honorable men. Frank Berry suggested placing a marker on their graves designating them as signers and started raising funds for the markers, but it was soon realized that only the few who visited those graves would know they were signers of the SC Ordinance of Secession. Some of these graves are in remote woods owned by various entities, including the US Forest Service. Albert Jackson originated the idea of a monument to honor these noble men. Albert presented the proposal to the SC SCV Division Executive Council in 2009. It was approved and the South Carolina Signers Monument Committee was created with Mr. Jackson as chairman.

The committee had several decisions to make, such as the design of the monument, where to place it and how to finance it. The easiest decision was where to place it: Charleston, because that is where the Ordinance of Secession was signed. They had at least three different locations in the Charleston area, but came face to face with that evil entity, political correctness. Some officials had approved having the monument placed on public property in their jurisdictions, until PC reared its ugly, evil head and the cowards sought shelter. One location approved by the Hunley Commission was the future CSS Hunley Museum, but when the committee realized it would be years before the site would be available, the committee decided to look elsewhere. It was a good decision, because the Hunley is still not ready to be displayed fully restored, even though it has been more than twenty years since the Hunley was brought home. To state a long drawn-out process of years in a few words, at least nine locations were considered across the state of South Carolina, but they were all on public property. They made progress on several sites, only to later be denied. The committee then realized they would have to find a private entity with land or purchase land for a location to place the monument.

In summer of 2016 the author received a call from Robert Roper, past commander of the SC SCV Division, whom the author knew. Mr. Roper requested a meeting with him and Albert Jackson. The meeting took place at the Dutch Oven, a restaurant, across the street of the Southern Patriot Shop. He was introduced to Mr. Jackson, chairman of the Signers Monument Committee.

The author was aware of the committee, because his Olde Abbeville camp had bought one of the limited forty-eight 8" x 8" paver for a $1,000, when the site for the monument appeared to be Charleston. Albert and Robert stated the difficulty they were having with political correctness in finding a location to place the signers monument and if they could not find a place near a larger city, would the author consider placing the monument on historically relevant Secession Hill. The author stated that the monument belonged, first in Charleston and second in Columbia; however, if those places could not be obtained, he would be delighted and honored to have it placed on Secession Hill.

In 2017 The Secession Hill Memorial Trust, Inc. was created as a 501(c)3 organization and later the state designated the property as a historical site. (No property taxes.) Secession Hill is now in a trust and hopefully saved for perpetuity.

At a Signers Monument committee meeting on 30 July 2017 it was decided that the monument would be placed on Secession Hill. A topographic survey, soil testing and the hiring of a general contractor occurred. Keith Rearden, an engineer and member of the Olde Abbeville Camp, designed the foundation and grading of the site began early in 2018 with a bulldozer, operated by a SCV compatriot, flying four 12" X 18" Confederate flags. No "politically correctness" on Secession Hill!

The South Carolina Signers Monument is fairly unique in that it has pictures set in stone on three of its sides. On the front side of the monument is a copy of the original Ordinance of Secession with the signatures of the 170 delegates. The monument was designed by compatriots Albert Jackson and Stephan Douglas with input of the owner of the monument company.

The county and city of Abbeville placed no obstacles in our way, but cooperated in every way they could. The author and some of the committee members met with the city manager and police chief on two occasions and they were very supportive. It took almost a year to prepare the site and have the monument installed, but finally after much planning at all levels, the dedication of the monument was on Saturday 10 November 2018. A speaker's platform was built, there was a parade though the town to the Hill (most in period dress carrying Confederate flags), and there were speakers, music and several cannon salutes. The actual desk, owned by the Union County Historical Society, on which the SC delegates signed the Ordinance of Secession was on site, and the monument was unveiled with about a thousand people in attendance, which included many direct descendants of the signers. It was a glorious success!

From the time the decision was made to place a monument somewhere in SC until the monument was placed on Secession Hill took ten long, arduous, anxious years in which time four commanders served our division. And from the time that Albert Jackson determined to honor the one hundred seventy men who gave their all for the freedom and self-government of South Carolina was about fifty years; however, none involved would surrender and victory, sweet victory, was achieved. We do, indeed, have some of our ancestor's DNA! A very beautiful and unique South Carolina Signers Monument is forever on the sacred ground of Secession Hill in Abbeville, South Carolina CSA. Daniel Pratt's Support ny (Pratt's cotton mill) was "worth a regiment of men to the Confederacy" due to its production of fabric for uniforms at a low price. Pratt's other industries also produced knapsacks, skillets, wooden buttons, and horse brushes for the Confederacy.

During and after the War, Pratt actively sought in various ways to relieve the suffering of the poor in Autauga County, providing jobs to workers or charity in those cases where it was needed. Col J. H. Livingston, one of Pratt's eulogists, said the following: "Born and reared in poverty, (Daniel Pratt) well knew how to appreciate the wants of the needy. Strangers he clothed and fed, and to the sick he administered comfort. He considered the poor of every creed, and bestowed his charities with a lavish hand". While serving as a state representative in 1862, Pratt sponsored a bill to authorize an Autauga County tax to support families of soldiers away at war; it was enacted into law and this relieved some of the suffering of families in Autauga County.

After the War, Pratt gave a lot and two-story building to the black people of Prattville, to use as a church and school. This became known as Ward's Chapel, and to this day there is a black church with that name on Fourth Street in Prattville.

Pratt's Final Days

The War Between The States ended badly for Pratt, though. With his Northern connections, he was able to obtain a pardon rather soon and get back to recovering his losses, which were calculated by his business associate and Autauga County historian Shadrach Mims at more than half a million dollars in the money of the time. Notwithstanding that loss, by the end of his life in 1873, Daniel Pratt had recovered enough wealth to leave a respectable inheritance to his nephew Merrill and his daughter Ellen. Ellen's husband, Henry Fairchild DeBardeleben, took her inheritance and became a principal figure in the coal and iron industry in Birmingham. One of his undertakings was one Pratt had begun during the War, the Red Mountain Company, which built the Oxmoor furnaces.

A month after his death, the citizens of Prattville, in an official town meeting, assembled "to pay public tribute to the memory of our belated friend and fellow-citizen, the Honorable Daniel Pratt, deceased." Five of Prattville's leading men came to the podium and honored the founder of the town of Prattville with abundant praise and admiration.

Shadrach Mims, the aforementioned Autauga County historian and Pratt's business partner, wrote this about Pratt, which describes his life and philosophy fairly well: "(Daniel Pratt) seemed to think that really money had no other value than to subserve a valuable purpose. He regarded himself only as a steward."

A list directory of African-Americans who served the Civil War Confederacy

Gregory G. Newson

"The Scout" is the title of this painting.

The original oil painting and Giclee canvas prints are available.

It was made of people from across the South. However, the Northern army tradition of burning down Southern court houses of innumerable Confederate papers about the integrated Southern army was a unified policy.

But all is not lost from the 16,000 plus American African confederates we have retrieved about 5,000 listed in this search directory.

This book 'Heroes by Force' is compiled with National, State archives, Confederate pensions, service records, Confederate land grants, slave narratives, books, old newspaper articles, muster rolls, and prisoner of war documents are all used to compile this collection of records by:

- (1) Person's full name.
- (2) The Company the person served in.
- (3) Unit or ship the person served in.
- (4) The Rank achieved by the person in the unit of job title.
- (5) Whether the person was a Slave or a Free Man of Color are included.
- (6) If person received a pension and other miscellaneous information found.

Britannica definition of a military unit:

A group having a prescribed size and a specific combat or support role within a larger military organization.

What You Were Taught: There was no such thing as a "Black Confederate soldier. The phrase is an oxymoron.

The winners of the war have been successful at propagating a cherry pick history till now.

lose the support of our fellow citizens. Remember, our fellow citizens heard what Gingrich stated. The continuous micro-messaging of the anti-Confederate narrative will cause the bulk of Americans to reject any positive feeling for our Confederate ancestors. As our SCV-sponsored, national poll demonstrated, 60 percent of Americans (not just Southerners) support maintaining monuments to Confederate veterans. This type of support is a rich source for gaining new members as well as inspiring current members to retain their membership. What will happen to gaining new members and retaining current members if the SCV allows only the anti-Confederate narrative to be heard?

With the formation of the Confederate Legion and its promoting of a positive view of the South, the SCV has begun to get our pro-Confederate message out to the general public. Most of the work of promoting a positive Confederate narrative is done via the local camps with the assistance of the vast majority of Southerners, 65 to 75 percent, have a positive view of Southern history and desire the correct history be taught. In 2017 a nation-wide poll proved that 54 percent of Americans viewed Southern history in a positive light. As mentioned, our SCV nationwide poll proved 60 percent of Americans (not just Southerners) approved of maintaining Confederate monuments and history. A 2022 state-wide poll in Louisiana of registered Republican voters came back with a shocking 99 percent favorable response to keeping Confederate monuments safe and secure. The simple fact is, we Southerners have the general public on our side at this time. To keep the public on the correct side of Southern heritage, we must do more at the camp level working with the Confederate Legion. And from the national level, the SCV must continue working on nation-wide ads. If we as an organization do these two things, we will be telling the world why we love the South and the political establishment will take note! By correctly promoting a positive narrative about the Confederate States of America, we can win this battle.

Confederate Legion. Currently, the National SCV is looking into using various national media sources to get our message out to the general public. In February of this year the SCV will begin running ads for six months promoting the National Confederate Museum and the SCV on Rick Revel's History Highway. History Highway is seen on Roku's AME-TV channel. Mr. Revel will be showing a 30-to-60-minute program about the National Confederate Museum, Elm Springs, and the SCV on his program, 'History Highway.' This will hopefully be the beginning of many such ads to be seen on other nationally broadcasted programs. The national SCV is also looking into means of using our museum as a way to promote the message about the SCV and correct Southern history. With local SCV camps working with the Confederate Legion and the National SCV promoting our Cause on a national stage, we will "vindicate the Cause."

ern heritage is but one element in this struggle. Christians who desire to maintain traditional moral values are part of this fight, as well as folks defending our Second Amendment rights and folks who struggle against high taxes and inflation.

SCV members, camps, Divisions and National must be actively involved in establishing our narrative about the War, its causes, and the terrible impact on the South and America's original constitutional Republic of Sovereign States. Southerners are still 60 to 70 percent in favor of preserving our Southern heritage. Our responsibility is to inform "our" people about the truth and encourage them to join us as we defend our traditional Southern heritage. We can create our parallel society by acting locally to educate and activate our fellow Southerners. We create our parallel society by sending information to local agents of influence — civic clubs, veterans' groups, religious leaders and local politicians. I urge every camp to elect an individual to serve as the camp's Heritage Promotion Officer. Have Heritage Promotion on every camp meeting's agenda. "Those people" have been working diligently against us for generations — shall we do less?

REPORT OF THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF

The delay in sending the article to our Editor-in-Chief Frank Powell caused something to go from being talked about to actually happening and that is the Reconciliation Memorial located in Arlington National Cemetery. At the time of the initial writing, I was talking with an attorney about how we could combat what was headed our way. We both talked about a defensive strategy and also heavily about an offensive strategy. Part of the discussion was about National SCV entering into the lawsuit and we needed permission from the General Executive Council (GEC) to do this. From the initial writing to this update, the GEC voted to enter into the lawsuit. I want to personally thank the members of the GEC for voting to enter into this lawsuit. It is a huge undertaking and all these men know the work and the road ahead and they are willing to step between evil and their ancestors just like their ancestors stepped between an invading army and their homes. I am not someone who believes in diving into lawsuits because we are judged negatively. Even if we are right and legal, we are denied our rights because of who we are. The battle will be uphill however it must be made. Yes, your help will be needed. We will need each of you to contact your representatives and we will be using one-click politics to make contact. Another will be to donate what you can to the Heritage Defense Fund.

Yes, I understand you are being asked to give and give often. Please remember this one simple thing, NO ONE IS GOING TO DO THIS EXCEPT US. IF NOT US ... WHO? IF NOT NOW ... WHEN? The SCV is stepping into the gap to secure and hold the line. I have heard the Kennedy Twins say modern day dollars are bullets. This is what will be used as ammunition during these lawsuits to the rebuild of the Forrest Plaza. You can go on the scv.org website and set up a monthly donation to whatever cause you wish to fight for. No donation is too small. We get hung up on big numbers but consistent numbers are just as critical because they compound over time. Don't be discouraged. The fight is here. Have a plan and be prepared.

I again wish to thank our Editor-in-Chief Frank Powell for his willingness to allow me the extra time to turn in this article. It was generous of him and it provided very up-to-date information.

I again thank you for your kind words, thoughts and prayers during the loss of my father. I am very humbled and very proud. I am the Son of a Confederate as are you.

R. S. Jason Boshers
Commander-in-Chief

BE A MAN AMONG MEN!

Join the Sons of Confederate Veterans Mechanized Cavalry

★ Heritage Preservation ★ Group Rides
See YOU on the "Front Lines"!

We of the Sons of Confederate Veterans (SCV) who ride motorcycles have banded together into a special interest group within the organization. Members of the SCV are most welcome and encouraged to join even if they do not have a motorcycle (dismounted cavalry) at the time of submitting the SCV Mechanized Cavalry Application. We currently have one annual national meet, around the second week of June, which rotates to each host state each year. Members living near each other are encouraged to gather on a more frequent basis to attend camp meetings, dedications, re-enactments, and other SCV and UDC events together. Even rides for fun are good to hone the skills and fellowship of the South's new Mechanized Cavalry!

We have "Back Patches" that you may wear, if you wish, at appropriate places and times. Had the motorcycle been in existence during the War Between the States, our ancestors would certainly have utilized that mode of transportation. We are then the present day mechanized cavalry, Confederate States of America, on-going. There is a one-time application fee of $100 to cover an attractive back patch. This fee also helps us pay for the expenses of the group and membership activities. There are currently no annual dues or fees. We are a Heritage group. We are not a motorcycle club. We follow a set of standing orders necessary to uphold the ethics and values of our organization.
